Safety is the first and most important factor to consider when buying a crib, which is why experts always recommend buying new. When you buy or accept a used crib, you risk it failing to meet the latest safety guidelines. Plus, if there's any disrepair, it could pose a safety hazard. Beyond safety, style, durability and longevity are other considerations. From budget-friendly options to splurge-worthy pieces, there are cribs out there to meet the needs of every parent. Choosing a travel crib totally overwhelmed me—Babies R Us, where we registered, has 117 models!—so I just picked one with all the bells and whistles. That was a mistake. Emmett has the Graco Pack N Play Racer (29.7 lbs., $159) which features a sunshade with hanging stuffed bears (added entertainment!), a "soothing" vibrating infant level, an "electronics module" with a night light, music, and nature sounds—plus, a changing table with a storage caddy. Our Pack N Play works well enough in theory, but it's turned out to be a pretty massive pain in the butt. First of all, it folds up into an awkward shape—long and boxy. And none of the add-ons—NOTHING besides the crib itself—fit in the travel case. (We've never used the changing table, since it's so cumbersome!) Also making it travel un-friendly: It weighs almost 30 pounds! (Meaning, it's impossible to pack on a plane or train trip.) It's also about 29 inches wide, so it doesn't fit through some standard interior doors. A smarter buy would have been the Cosco Funsport Playard (20 lbs., $53) which is still really heavy, but is more than $100 less. Media Platforms Design Team Here's baby Emmett on the infant level of his Pack N Play. (Awww-sies! Looks like someone's mommy forgot the travel crib sheet!) If I could turn back time though—cue the Cher—I would have registered for the Baby Bjorn Travel Crib Light 2 (11 lbs., $219) which my friend Joanna uses and adores. It folds into a more reasonable shape (like a small suitcase—19"-by-24"-by-6"—see a photo here) and it weighs only a third of what my Pack N Play weighs. It doesn't have the infant level, which was the most useful add-on our Pack N Play features, but the infant level is only useful for about six months. And most parents don't travel a ton in a baby's first six months! When we were planning our first trip to visit Emmett's grandma and grandpa in Florida last spring, Rory said there was NO way he was lugging the Pack N Play on the plane. I didn't want to spring for the Bjorn since we already had a travel crib, so I ordered the Mia Moda Playgio Playard (16 lbs., $76) which we keep at the Florida house. I don't feel like it's as sturdy as our regular Pack N Play—the mattress seems a little small—and the whole thing seems bigger, but it weighs half as much as the Pack N Play. Still, it also folds into that bulky travel-unfriendly shape, so I don't think we'd bother bringing this one on a plane, either. But if you don't do a lot of traveling by plane (or if there's already a crib at your destination) this would be an okay, much-lighter option to travel with in the car. What's the best travel crib you've used? Since we plan to continue traveling while Emmett's still crib-size, is it worth it to upgrade to the Bjorn? You may be able to find more information about this and similar content at piano.io Incident Number: Error: Unknown Product If someone you know is having a baby, there's a chance she has a baby registry out there so that friends and family can help the new parents prepare for their little bundle of joy. Target is one of the popular options because of its large selection and high-quality gear.Go to Target.comThe easiest way to find an expecting parent's Target baby registry is to go online to Target.com. This way, you can find and view the registry and shop for items right from the comfort of your home. Once you're on Target.com's home page, click on "Registries and Lists," and you'll land on the Gift Registry & Lists page.Enter the Parents' Personal InformationAt the top of the Gift Registry & Lists page, you'll see fields to enter the registrant's first and last name. You can search for the expectant mom or dad's name, and both will bring up results. Below the fields where you enter the name, there's a dropdown menu that allows you to choose the type of registry you're searching for. Click on "Baby" or, if you prefer, you can click on "Search All Registries" to see other types of registries.Choose the Right RegistryOnce you've entered the information, you'll see a list of registrants with the name you entered. Keep in mind that the registry covers Targets all over the United States, so you may have to scroll a bit if your friend or relative has a common name. In addition to the names of the parents, you'll see the city where they live and the baby's due date. Click on "View Registry" next to the listing that fits your search.View the RegistryOnce you're on the page that features the actual registry, you may see a note from the expectant parents if they opted to personalize it. You'll also see a tally of how many items there are and how many gifts other people have purchased. As you scroll down, you'll see the items on the registry grouped by department, like Nursery Furniture, Diapering, Bath, Clothing and other options. You can view the prices and how many items are still needed.Shop for ItemsIf you know which items you want to purchase for your friend or relative, you can shop right from the registry. Click on the red "Add to Cart" button, and go ahead and check out and pay for your items. Once you've done that, you can return to the registry and mark the items as purchased. You might want to mark the items as purchased if you bought them in store to ensure the new parents don't receive too many duplicates. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET
